Would you be open to fostering if the rescue needed an “emergency foster*”? _____

An “emergency foster” is needed when a dog is found/returned and in need of a place to go until a permanent foster or a home could be found.

Adopting is a serious responsibility. A dog could live for 10 to 20 years. Each pet has its own personality and preference that you can help shape through love and continuous training. A dog makes considerable demands on your time and resources. A dog owner needs to spend time walking, grooming, training, and playing with their pet every day. Certain breeds may require professional grooming. Dogs require special food and regular veterinary care. This includes annual shots and monthly preventative medications for heartworm, fleas, and ticks. In some cases, these expenses can exceed $1,000 a year. Do you feel that you are capable of providing these things for the remainder of the dog’s life at this time?

Are you prepared to accept the financial and personal responsibility of a pet? _____

If an unexpected and costly illness or emergency should arise with your pet, how would you finance care? If this has happened before, tell us about that time. _____

An adoption counselor from the rescue will follow up with you by talking to you over the phone with more questions, if necessary, and by scheduling a home check with you. Would you have any objections?

Please describe what a typical day would be like for you and your new pet: _____

Is there anything else you would like to tell us about yourself that would help us pick the perfect home? (i.e. hobbies, exercise, travel)
